INTRODUCTION

Interpretation of results obtained during the latter part of 1971 on E.L. 13 continued during the period. No ground exploration was possible due to a lack of suitable access roads during the wet season. Planning for the commencement of work on E.L. 13 for the 1972 dry season continued.

2.0 CAMP LOCATION

The wet programme camp comprising three air-conditioned caravans at Mudginberri Station was utilised during the field work on E.L. 12. Although no field work was carried out on E.L. 13 during the period an active exploration programme is planned for the 1972 dry utilising the components of the present camp at Mudginberri.

3.0 INTERPRETATION OF RESULTS

A detailed interpretation of the radiometric and geological results obtained during the previous season's work on E.L. 13 (then A. to P. 2014) continued in the Sydney office. This work included a layout of grid patterns for open hole reconnaissance drilling over selected anomalous areas during the 1972 dry season. In addition, several areas in the eastern portion of E.L. 13 were selected for further sampling and geological mapping. Planning is also in existence in order to utilise dry season access roads already constructed in order to minimise further road building on E.L. 13 during the reconnaissance phases of the 1972 dry programme.
Exploration on the E.L. would be directed from the base camp on E.L. 12 but it is likely that a fly camp system utilising temporary tent facilities would be employed for on-site management of reconnaissance work on E.L. 13 during the 1972 dry season.

4.0 EXPENDITURE DURING PERIOD

Although no on-site expenditure was incurred a great deal of interpretation of previous results and planning for future work was carried out in our Sydney office.
